In the novel Siddhartha by Herman Hesse, a young Hindu named Siddhartha searches for Nirvana, which in his religion means “inner peace.” In order to find Nirvana, he must first find himself through religious rituals, such as fasting, meditating, and chants. However, none of these efforts assists him, so he leaves his isolated setting to join a radical group of religious men. Even though he starts to move toward his goal, He is still disturbed by his failure to achieve it. Therefore, to try to solve some of his problems, a great Buddha’s speech is heard by him. Yet even the Buddha can give him no consolation. In a fit of rage and frustration, he abandons his religious life to pursue a more secular one. For years he indulges himself in worldly pleasure, which leads to great sorrow when he sees what he has become. Once again he abandon’s his life, leaving his richs and a son he doesn’t know he has. His search for a better life leads him through many sorrows, but by learning from his mistakes, he places himself closer to his goal. Not until he finds his son, and then loses his son, does he actually find the truth in all of the teachings.

Siddhartha’s search for inner peace is what fills this novel with life. His discovery of himself and Nirvana show how man can achieve great things if he never quits. We can all learn from our mistakes, just like Siddhartha.

In the Indian short story "Nectar in a Sieve" by Markandaya, the character Rukmani tries all her life to escape from being a poor village girl. From the time she marries into a lower caste family, her karma is set for her to be a poor village wife. Although her religion says it is impossible for her to succeed. She still strives to improve life for her husband, for her children, and including herself.

As a little girl, Rukmani had dreamed of a grand marriage, especially since her father was the headsman of the village. Then the British took over and the headsman was no longer a prominent figure within the village's everyday life. This was the beginning of the many hardships Rukmani has had to face.

11

She is now married to a poor tenant farmer, Nathan, to whom she is devoted. Having been the daughter of a headman, knows nothing of farming. To succeed as a farmer, she has to learn how to raise many different vegetables and fruits because in India the dry season is followed by a treachorous monsoon season. Rukmani has a daughter and many sons and her family's fortune begins to improve. Then the monsoons hit and destroy the crops and the farm.
